A Knu Generation
By Emily Harada, Next Gen Nikkei Board Member

Picture this: a dark dancehall with glimpses of psychedelic flowers and peace signs among strands of twinkling lights and the voice of Smokey Robinson fills the hall. Suddenly, lights hit Tonko Doi saying: “It is 1968 at MBC (Midwest Buddhist Church)...” However this time around, the dance-goers in the crowd at MBT are no longer just Sansei, but joined multiple generations and races alike.

The sold-out evening, titled “Nikkei Nights; Talkin Bout’ My Generations,” featured the reunion of the Knu(er) Basic, formerly known as Knu Basic, which was comprised of Steve Arima, Jim Chikaraishi, George Formoso, Darrell Kaneshiro, Alan Arima, and Elaine Matsushita. The band played 3 sets throughout the evening. The Knu(er) Basic worked hard leading up to the big night, practicing 8 hours per weekend, for which lead singer George would travel all the way from Michigan. He was not the only one traveling for the event, as the event brought the whole Chikaraishi gang together, as well as two fans from California and other groupies across the Chicagoland region.

The band played classic 60s songs including Steve’s trademark “Last Kiss,” and the never ending “Shout.” One memorable moment was when the band invited special “voice of the angels” guests on stage, such as Ryan Toguri on lead with David Toguri and Mike Naito as backup vocals for the song “My Girl.” David remarked after that they didn’t get to rehearse it, but when Ryan jumped on vocals, he wasn’t going to argue.

Younger Nikkei also led the evening with entertainment throughout intermissions. Brandon Ishikata, a JACL Kakehashi Program alumnus and professional dance teacher at May I Have This Dance studio in Jefferson Park, led line dancing that got the whole floor moving to the song “September” to fit the occasion, as the evening was, as the song says, on the 21st night.

The ensemble “Friends of 94,” comprised of JACL Chicago board member Lane Mita, as well as Mas Hoshii, Joey Rolla, and Elizabeth Mangulabnan were also asked to perform together after their separate performances during the Open Mic Night this past June during the Contested Histories exhibit at MBT. Despite not living during the times, they brought the crowd back to the 60s grooves of Stevie Wonder and “Sukiyaki”.

Outside of the performances, crowds of different generations came together and shared memories of the performances at Viking Hall, Battle of the Bands in Chinatown, and some of the other bands that also used to gig around town. While the conversations happened in the main hall, Anna Takada, Kat
Nakagawa, and Jason Matsumoto were busy gathering interviews to capture not just the stories, but also the memories being made that evening. Some of these footages will be going towards JASC’s archives.

On behalf of JACL Chicago, thank you to the co-head Elaine Ogawa and committee members Steve, Jason, Lisa Doi, Gary and Lynn Yamagiwa, Tonko Doi, Rich Taura, and Gail Chase; and to all of the volunteers from both MBT and JACL Chicago. Together, we raised over $4,000 that will be divided between the MBT 75th anniversary fund and JACL Chicago youth groups. Outta Sight! 🎥
